The short film is about a pilot program done at an elementary school where children receive safety instruction through interaction and song. For 4 days children received safety instructions via an instructor, in fire safety, stranger awareness, neighbourhood watch and school safety. On the fifth day, a singing group called the safety girls performed songs that backed up the instructions given to the children. The children had a high percentage of retention due to the combination of instruction, interaction and song. The film is a combination of the songs and still photography that shows the children and their interactions with the instructor and singing group.
